

Building Your Email Address Database

At the center of any successful email marketing campaign is a permission-based email address list. But research shows that the majority of organizations have email addresses for less than 10% of their postal files! Bolster your campaign results by adding quality, permission-based email addresses to your database.

Benefits

Gaining your constituents' email addresses will:

- Provide an additional communication channel
- Reduce acquisition and marketing costs
- Increase constituent participation and retention rates

Collect Email Addresses Across Multiple Channels

There are several ways to cost effectively build your email address database, which can lead to increased constituent participation and retention rates. Remember the golden rule: Every communication or touch point with a constituent should start or end with a request for an email address. Below are a few suggestions of how to collect email addresses across various channels.

- Direct mail. Be upfront with your constituents by giving them a reason to release their email addresses to you. Email newsletters, donation confirmations, petitions, and special offers are several benefits that might encourage your constituents to take that extra step.
- Web page. Improve your sign-up rates on your Web page by clearly stating the benefits constituents will receive by email (i.e., email newsletters, campaign updates, etc.) upon registering. Also make sure that the email address request box is easily visible on your home page. If a visitor has to search for where to sign up, they are less likely to give you his or her email address.
- Telemarketing. Using a live person to ask for an email address will increase the likelihood that it is provided. Update your agents' phone script to ensure they tell constituents proactively about the benefits of providing their email address.

You should also explore ways to leverage your existing email database collection. Ask your constituents to reach out to their friends, family, and associates to stimulate viral marketing. Encouraging individuals to pass along your email newsletter, recent news, or other information to people they think have similar interests is a cost effective way to build your list.

Explore Email Appending and Email Change of Address Services

Email appending is the process of adding an individual's email address to that individual's postal record inside your existing database. This is accomplished by matching the postal database against a third-party, permission based database of postal and email address information. Utilizing an email appending service enables you to add email addresses for up to 25% of your postal file, within 3-4 weeks.

Remember, though, that email appending is not a prospecting tool - it should only be used to obtain email addresses for individuals who already have some form of pre-existing relationship with your organization (e.g., members, offline donors, etc.). This is an important best practice that is critical to follow, not only to keep you in good standing with your constituents, but also in accordance with your eCRM vendor contract.

The process for completing an email append is relatively straightforward. Your opt-in postal file is securely transferred to an email appending provider, who will do an initial gross email address match of your file against its opt-in database of postal and email address records. Your appending provider will then send these matches a permission-based email message prepared by you. All bounces and opt-out requests will be removed from the list, then an email address file of your customers will be given to you. It's simple and affordable — less than the cost of a postage stamp for each email address!

For email addresses you already have on file, you can use an email change of address (ECO) service to update members whose original opt-in email address has gone bad due to list churn. Typically, this service is provided by the same provider you use for email appending.
